Thank you for riding!

When Greg Oaster was 34, he was diagnosed with a serious heart condition. Three years later, he experienced another unbelievable setback when he was diagnosed with MS.

Together, the two conditions have had a massive impact on the former marathoner and volunteer EMT. But he hasn't given up.

Greg did everything he could to keep working as an accountant but that became impossible when MS began to seriously affect his ability to think. Without a job or social security benefits, the Oaster family turned to the National MS Society for help. Through the HomeAble program, Greg's home became more accessible, but that's only part of why the Society is so important to him.

"MS can strike anybody at any time — it could be your wife, a friend or your neighbor. By supporting the Society, you are funding research and help people deal with the costs of the disease. And that's really important to people like me."
